I. Today's Reading

NKJV: 1 Corinthians 14:26-40

26 How is it then, brethren? Whenever you come together, each of you has a psalm, has a teaching, has a tongue, has a revelation, has an interpretation. Let all things be done for edification.

27 If anyone speaks in a tongue, let there be two or at the most three, each in turn, and let one interpret.

28 But if there is no interpreter, let him keep silent in church, and let him speak to himself and to God.

29 Let two or three prophets speak, and let the others judge.

30 But if anything is revealed to another who sits by, let the first keep silent.

31 For you can all prophesy one by one, that all may learn and all may be encouraged.

32 And the spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets.

33 For God is not the author of confusion but of peace, as in all the churches of the saints.

34 Let your women keep silent in the churches, for they are not permitted to speak; but they are to be submissive, as the law also says.

35 And if they want to learn something, let them ask their own husbands at home; for it is shameful for women to speak in church.

36 Or did the word of God come originally from you? Or was it you only that it reached?

37 If anyone thinks himself to be a prophet or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things which I write to you are the commandments of the Lord.

38 But if anyone is ignorant, let him be ignorant.

39 Therefore, brethren, desire earnestly to prophesy, and do not forbid to speak with tongues.

II. Key Summary

- Paul addresses the Corinthian practice where each member brought a contribution to worship—psalm, teaching, revelation, tongue, or interpretation—and establishes the governing principle: "Let all things be done for edification."
 - Paul sets specific limits on the public use of tongues and prophecy: no more than two or three speakers per meeting, each taking turns, with tongues requiring interpretation; without an interpreter, the speaker must remain silent.
 - Paul grounds the call for order in God's own character—"God is not the author of confusion but of peace"—and concludes with the summary command: "Let all things be done decently and in order."

III. Passage Analysis

Edifying Others Is the One Standard for Every Gift

"The object is moral improvement, not idle self display, not the ostentation of individual gifts." [1]

Paul lists every kind of contribution members might bring to a gathering—psalm, teaching, revelation, tongue, interpretation—then caps it with a single rule: let all things be done for edification. Whatever the gift, the only question that matters is whether it builds up the people around you.

Order in Worship Reflects God's Own Character

"Let all things be done for edification also looks outward. It doesn't mean, 'let everything be done for my edification.' It means, 'let everyone come to church with a heart to build up someone else.'" [2]

Paul's statement that "God is not the author of confusion but of peace" is more than a rule for meetings—it is a description of who God is. The order Paul calls for is rooted in God's own nature as a God of peace, so bringing order to a gathering is a way of reflecting that nature in community life.

IV. Reflection Question

When you show up to a gathering—church, youth group, or a hangout with friends—are you usually thinking "what will I get out of this," or "what can I bring to this"?

Paul says everyone can bring something to the meeting—a song, a word of encouragement, something they've learned—look at the people around you and ask what you have to offer them.
